Task 2: In Vietnam, there is a variety of festivals, including Lunar New Year, Mid-Autumn Festival, Vu lan Festival, etc,. Lunar New Year is one of the most important Festivals of the Vietnamese people. When Spring arrives, all Vietnamese are thrilled by advent of Tet. Wherever they may be, they feel an immense nostalgia, wishing to come back to their homeland for a family reunion and a taste of particular flavors of the Vietnamese festivals. This sacred Festival occurs sometime between late January or early February, depending on Lunar Calendar. Although officially a three-day affair, festivities may continue for a week or more with every effort made to indulge in eating, drinking, and enjoyable social activities. It is also a time for family reunions, and for paying respect to ancestors and the elders. Gifts of food are made to friends, neighbors and relatives in the days before Tet. Tet holiday is for people to have a rest, enjoy their time, visit relatives, and join festivals, therefore, everybody needs to well dress. The first day of Tet is reserved for the nuclear family. Children receive a red envelope containing money from their elders. This tradition is called "m?ng tu?i" in the north and "lì xì" in the south. usually, children wear their new clothes and give their elders the traditional Tet greetings before before receiving the money.
