

Task 2: I don't agree that an ideal house only needs to be large. You'll be happier in a smaller house. There are many reasons why you'll actually be happier in a smaller house as it is easier to maintain. Anyone who has owned a house knows the amount of time, energy, and effort to maintain it. All things being equal, a smaller home requires less of your time, energy, and effort to accomplish that task. Secondly, less time spent cleaning. And that should be reason enough... Thirdly, less expensive. Smaller homes are less expensive to purchase and less expensive to keep. Less environmental impact. A smaller home requires less resources to build and less resources to maintain. And that benefits all of us. More time. Many of the benefits above (less cleaning, less maintaining, mental freedom) result in the freeing up of our schedule to pursue the things in life that really matter - whatever you want that to be. Encourages family bonding. A smaller home results in more social interaction among the members of the family. And while this may be the reason that some people purchase bigger homes, I think just the opposite should be true. Forces you to remove baggage. Moving into a smaller home forces you to intentionally pare down your belongings. Less temptation to accumulate. If you don't have any room in your house for that new treadmill, you'll be less tempted to buy it in the first place (no offense to those of you who own a treadmill... and actually use it). Less decorating. While some people love the idea of choosing wall color, carpet color, furniture, window treatments, decorations, and light fixtures for dozens of rooms, I don't. Wider market to sell. By its very definition, a smaller, more affordable house is affordable to a larger percentage of the population than a more expensive, less affordable one.

Task 1: Dear Ally, I'm sad that you didn't come to my birthday. We have been together blowing birthday candles , fruit. Then we sang happy birthday and my favourite song. We go out to see the movies. The party have people in my family and friends from high school. I am given a clothes , shoes , cards and teddy bear. They're beautiful and I really like them. Ngan
