

Task 1: Let's meet for dinner near my house on Saturday. We shall eat in the park next to my house. And I think we can start at 8.30 a.m and you can park your car in my yard. Phuong Task 2: There are a lot of benefits when you travel alone. One of the best things about travelling solo is that you get to do what you want to do, when you want to do it. While travelling, it's inevitable that you'll meet heaps of new people. Being away from your normal group of friends puts you outside of your comfort zone. You can't sit back and let the conversation happen, you have to go find it, get involved and let your personality shine. When you're in a different country you face new challenges that from the outside might seem impossible, but really, actually, you know you got this. You might end up going on that white-water rafting day trip or paragliding the Tyrol - those once in a lifetime experiences that you never would have done if you'd been in the comfort of your own country and friends.
