

T1 Dear Ally, It's a pity that you couldn't have came to my birthday party last week. Everyone was enjoying themshelves there, but without you the party couldn't be as interesting. Me and all the lads from our class were playing all kinds of games, and drank a lot, just the same as everytime. Then out of no where Dave came and gave me a huge present - I mean really huge, it was a bloody vacuum cleaner !!! Right, I'm throwing another party next week. And needless to say you are always invited. Looking forward to seeing you there. Best wishes, Trang. T2. In my opinion, the ideal house can be in any size but "too small" - which is sometimes uncomfortable to live in. It does not have to be as big as a villa, just an averange size is nice, but the first thing to consider is that it looks nice. Also, the ideal house must have nice furniture; weather-resist as it's not too hot to live in the summer and not too cold in the freezing weather. Some people say that the best house to live in is the really, really big one. I won't buy that. Try to clean the house when you are alone and there are like 100 square-meters of floor to clean!!! But big house has its own advantages. You can store almost everything in a big house, from 2 refrigerators, a whole lot of tables and chairs, even an elephant if you want!!! But small houses are lovely, because you'll be able to enjoy the warmth in the winter in a "easier way". I mean, literally. Imagine sitting near your dear family near a fireplace. See? It should be a really nice frame in your photo to hang on the wall. As a final thought, the ideal house isn't the size it is, it's the way you use it.
