

Task 1 Hi Alex! I'm so glad to hear that you're going to visit my town and I'm pleased to answer your questions. There's a swimming pool here. Not too big but I really love it because the water is very clean and cool. You can get there easily by bus from town centre. The best time to go is in the morning because it will get busy later. Hope that helps! Love, Trang

Task 2 A big family is a family that have many members living together under a roof. Big families are becoming less and less common nowadays. Living in big families can gives us some advantages but also lots of drawbacks. First advantage, in my opinion, is that it will help members of the family learn how to share and compromise. A kid have to share bathroom, food or toys with his or her sibling. That will help the kid to have more social skills and be easier to make friends. Menbers of a big family can also help each other in bad times. They can sit back together, talking about their problems and find solutions together. That would make a joyful atmosphere. But there're also drawbacks. Money is one of them. A big family needs more money than small one to buy stuff for all of its members. Privacy is another problems. Family members may have to share bedrooms or bathrooms with the others. It is hard to have any time alone because there are so many people living in one house. Finally, it takes the parents more responsibility to take care of all their children. Living in a big family has never been easy. But if members of the family can solve problems together and love each other, there's also a lot of fun. An example of an advantage of living in big families: There's a family with parents and four kids. Their house isn't big so children have to share two bedrooms. There's some problems with privacy but brothers and sisters are very close to each other. They protect each other at school when being bullied. They know how to share stuff with their siblings and other people.
