

Task 1: Sorry buddy, i'll be busy on Saturday evening. But we can meet for dinner on Sunday. I think we should eat beef steak. You can pick me up at 8p.m, drive to the restaurant and park there. Tram Anh Task 2: I agree with that opinion. I spend a lot of time on the road, often by myself, and I've learned that travelling alone is easier than you might think, totally liberating, and completely rewarding in a way few other experiences in life can match. Travelling alone brings me a lot of benefit. When you travel alone, you'll learn a lot about yourself in a way that's simply impossible when you're in the midst of your normal daily routine. I often surprise myself by the new interests I develop when I'm traveling or the way I interact with strangers differently than I would when I'm home. I'm also able to look at my life with some distance and think about my future goals with a fresh set of eyes. You will make a lot of friend. Your experiences will be more meaningful. Travelling alone will boost your confidence. You will feel more satisfied in the end of the trip. Sometimes, you would find out the answers of an important question what made you think a lot of times.
