*Task 2: Some people believe that a successful film only needs famous actors. But in fact, this is not right in all of the situations. A film is called to be success when it gethers many factors like context of the film, public relations after finishing film... Famous actors or actresses may be have strong attraction to audience but director needs to consider whether they are suitable for characters. As my knowledge, when looking for some films in the Internet to entertain at the weekend, sometimes I find there are several films which is so good without famous actors. Actors and actresses in these films are quite young and not having so much experience, but due to good context, their natural turning into characters gave impression to audience. These actors are fresh anf most of them took part in making film several times at that time, but the films were successful without so much reputation from famous actors. In second situation, I also watch many films which were advertised strongly due to joining of famous actors. These films regularly focus on marketing, PR in television or the Internet about actors who took part in film and were being famous. However, as I saw them, I relly felt disappointed about context, luckily due t
